KELLOGG COMPANY LOOKING FOR GREAT IDEAS

BATTLE CREEK, Mich., October 3, 2008 – Kellogg Company’s new product innovation program has often been recognized as key to its success in recent years. However, more and more of the Company’s technology-driven innovations (e.g. Special K2O® clear protein water, Printed Fun Pop-Tarts™ ink-jet toaster pastries, and LiveBright® brain health bars with DHA) have been enabled through partnerships with outside companies. Now Kellogg is hoping to discover new technologies and partnership opportunities through the creation of a Web site – www.kellogsgreatideas.com – accessible from Kelloggs.com.

“When it comes to innovation, one of our guiding principles is that “Ideas Come from Anywhere, Always,” said Jim Melluish, Director of Marketing for Kellogg Company’s Open Innovation team. “With this Web site we can do an even better job of connecting external ideas and opportunities with the Kellogg teams who can drive them.”

Specifically, Kellogg Company is looking for promising new food, packaging, or processing technologies; partially or fully developed new products, as well as innovation collaboration opportunities. Submitting non-confidential innovation proposals is simple and streamlined. All Great Innovation proposals will receive a response within six to eight weeks.

The Web site also provides a process for consumers to submit their own suggestions for new products or product improvements.

“We have a long history of listening to consumers and responding to meet the growing needs of all families,” said Mr. Melluish. “Providing an easy way for consumers who are passionate about our brands to tell us what they’d like to see is what ‘Ideas Come from Anywhere’ is all about.”
